

1. My daughter has been experiencing ongoing health problems for over five years. Her symptoms include: frequent bloody noses, extreme fatigue, high lymphocyte count, mental agitation, and poor concentration.
2. I sought medical counsel from numerous doctors and specialists including a functional medicine nutritionist. The nutritionist gave me a comprehensive questionnaire and asked if we lived near large power lines. We did live near large power lines at the time, and I bought an electromagnetic meter to see if we were being exposed to electromagnetic radiation. The readings on the meter were high. I attributed the readings to modern-day living, and started researching materials that would block the radiation for my daughter during sleep.
3. I used social media to explore information related to autoimmune conditions because I thought she probably had some type of autoimmune condition. I used social media to follow doctors and nutritionists, and I kept getting spam videos in my feed about “targeted individuals.” I felt sorry for those who thought of themselves as targeted and assumed they had mental health disorders. However, there was one video that caught my attention in which a woman told me I was being targeted. I laughed it off, but something about the video disturbed me.
4. On September 24, 2024, I made my own social media video where I asked if there was anyone with credible and verifiable evidence of targeting, specifically directed energy weapons.
5. A man with a profile named Curt Weldon contacted me on LinkedIn and said, “I think you’re correct!” in answer to my question, is it possible I was being targeted? See Exhibit A
6. After reading about directed energy weapons, I realized it would be nearly impossible to collect credible evidence, however I did take some pictures of horizontal burn lines on our bedroom wall. See Exhibit B
7. I was not convinced I was being targeted and thought it was unlikely. However, I was reminded of a book I wrote, printed, and sent to a few people of influence. The book was titled Pyramid Scheme and was a pocket-sized book about how 89% of stocks were owned by 10% of the population, making it a pyramid scheme. I emphasized the need to return to the small-business model in order to create more opportunity. I started to wonder if my book drew unwanted attention and someone was targeting me. See Exhibit C
8. I still looked for “rational” explanations for my daughter’s health problems and found some in a new rental in Loveland, Colorado that we had just moved to: mold. However, that didn’t account for health problems from the prior years.
9. We moved from the rental in Loveland, Colorado to Berthoud, Colorado in October 2024.
10. Her health problems continued to ebb and flow like they had been. They improved in comparison to our time spent in the house with mold in Loveland but were still severe.
11. I focused on her nutrition and did the best I could; I still assumed her health problems were likely due to an autoimmune condition.
12. In approximately February or March, a new family moved into the townhouse directly across from ours in Berthoud. Their address is: Berthoud CO 80513.
13. My daughter’s health seemed to deteriorate again, and I started questioning the likelihood of me being targeted. I wrote an email to the United Nations seeking guidance. See Exhibit D

14. After sending an email to the UN, I found a document compiled by the UN titled: Directed Energy Weapons / Targeted Individual Patents. See Exhibit E

15. I started taking readings on my Trifield EMF Meter again and since the readings were high, I built a copper tent for my daughter to sleep in. Shortly after constructing the tent, I noticed what appeared to be burn marks on the tent. See Exhibit F

16. I noticed our neighbor who lived at: Berthoud CO 80513 left his garage door cracked open approximately 10 inches. I also noticed that my daughter had more bloody noses, and the EMF readings were higher when he did this. See Exhibit G

17. From the last week of August 2025 through the first week of September 2025, my daughter had one to two bloody noses a day and was too tired to go see a movie or take a drive.

18. I decided to leave our home and go to the mountains to see if her condition improved. We left our home at: Berthoud CO 80513 for nearly a month - with one return back to Berthoud. Her bloody noses stopped almost entirely, and she had more energy.

19. On October 9, 2025, we were renting an Airbnb, I heard something in the attic. I taped my phone to a spatula and took a video of the attic. I saw what appeared to be a man with what appeared to be a laser-type weapon. See Exhibit H

20. We returned home to Berthoud on October 11, 2025. I noticed my neighbor's garage was cracked open again. I looked under his garage and took a picture of what appeared to be a long gun-type weapon pointed at our house. See Exhibit I

21. I submitted a Freedom of Information Act request to the FBI on January 10, 2026. See Exhibit J

22. I was looking for the actual mechanism for the radio frequency transmitter and found this in my lightbulb. See Exhibit K

Re: Directed Energy Weapons

I was the Government Relations Director (GRD) for the Mountain States Chapter of Paralyzed Veterans of America for approximately 2.5 years when I was laid off due to funding cuts for GRD's. After the lay-off, I reeled and lost direction. I researched ways to make money such as starting a daycare and had a fun education about the importance of zoning laws and HOA rules when starting a business. My husband and I struggled financially and decided to sell the only property we'd ever owned - a two bedroom townhouse - in order to pay our debts and start anew. We sold our townhouse on day one and had multiple offers above asking because Colorado was a boom state in 2016.

We moved two blocks away, and I researched independent publishing, marketing, and business ideas during this time. I thought about starting my own home health-agency. I needed to earn money and wanted to have my own business. During my research of home health agencies, I found one that was employee owned. My interest was piqued, and I then researched different types of ownership and business models. Employee ownership was interesting to me because it seemed to offer employees an ownership stake in their work and integrated democratic principles into the business model. I grew to think of employee ownership as the perfect marriage of capitalism and democracy. After all my research, I wrote a small book that I now believe put me on the radar of some unsavory types of people.

I wrote a pocket book that I named Pyramid Scheme about the deleterious effects of having a system that promotes publicly-traded businesses, in which 89% of the stocks created through these "capitalist" businesses are owned by 10% of the population. I named the book Pyramid Scheme for obvious reasons. My book cut through the propaganda used to bolster the publicly-traded business model and offered alternative capitalist-business models. I opted to print copies of the book and send them to some people of influence - however - I decided against independent publishing and promoting the book because I knew to do so presented a risk to my children. If I was a single woman without children, I wouldn't have hesitated to promote the book, but I felt entirely responsible for their wellbeing, and so I decided to tread lightly. I thought I could tread lightly by parlaying some of the principles of my book into some form of business that would be less threatening to the powers-that-be, and I then developed the website EmployeeOwnedEconomy.com

I knew that even my less threatening efforts could put me in danger. However, I believed that if someone wanted to end what I was saying, by ending my life - because my ideas were just a bit too palatable and relatable to a wide spectrum of citizens - that they would just do me in with an "accident." I imagined that the worst case scenario involved, "poor mom being killed in a car accident," or "being one casualty among many in a mass shooting." I hadn't then heard of Directed Energy Weapons and Neurowarfare; if I had known that the potential fallout from my efforts to create a more just economic system, could put me on the radar - literally - of such sinister life-destroying technology, I probably would have chosen to walk a different path.

It took years before I knew about Neurowarfare when I was searching for the cause of my daughter's failing health and hired a functional medicine nutritionist who asked a wide spectrum of questions about all things health related including, living near large power lines. It was then that I bought a sensor that detected microwaves and electromagnetic waves. Some of the readings were quite high in our apartment in Littleton, and I began to question potential health problems that could be associated with our everyday power usage. Even then though, it didn't occur to me that I was being "targeted" with Neurowarfare. I had, of course, heard of people who thought they were targeted and assumed they were suffering from paranoid mental disorders. I don't remember what prompted me to research what "targeted individual" meant more thoroughly or what prompted me to consider the possibility that my migraines, my daughter's declining health, my husband's declining health, and our devolving life circumstances were maybe connected. Even after more research, I wasn't convinced that I was being targeted and was still looking for more mainstream explanations for my family's spiraling life conditions. It was also during this time, after our trip through Montreal, and our relocation to Littleton that I got involved with a new political party, the Forward Party. I was less and less drawn to either mainstream political party, and the Forward Party appealed to my instincts that democracy was moving towards totalitarianism and was in need of a revamp. I also decided I wanted to run for office - family health be damned; I wouldn't let that stop me. I sent a request for endorsement along with my policy positions on all the issues of the day to the Forward Party's Executive Committee of which I was on. I asked to resign from the Committee and instead run for Congress with their endorsement. Shortly after I presented my endorsement request, my husband lost business and my daughter's health seemed to get worse. I knew there was no way I could run for office, and so I turned my mind to matters of survival. We agreed to move to a less expensive state and my political aspirations turned to ash. I was still searching for answers for my daughter's ailments and began seeking out more functional medicine practitioners since one possible explanation for her problems turned up on a blood test as PANDAS Syndrome.

We landed in Oklahoma, and I still had questions about how to help her get better but no definitive answers. Oklahoma was a bust, and so we landed in Loveland, Colorado. It was in Loveland where I started to consider Neurowarfare with more curiosity after using my Trifield EMF Meter one night and discovering how high the readings were. I started to research Neurowarfare, and I posted a video on social media asking for legitimate and verifiable information from a credible source about the existence of Directed Energy Weapons. I got some feedback and there was one person who stood out saying, "I think you're right," when I asked if these weapons were being used against us. He also asked me why I wrote the book. He was a former Congressman and former CEO of a technology based energy weapons research company. He said they worked on four major areas of defense technology including, Electro Magnetic Pulses, Directed Energy Weapons (DEW's), and two others. He said DEW's were more mainstream than people knew, and the Russian and Chinese governments were using them as well. He said our justice department denied the existence of the weapons because they were using them against American adversaries.

I was distraught and knew there was little I could do about such technology if it was being used against us. There have been numerous occasions when I've zigzagged and looped around isolated neighborhoods to see if I'm being followed, and it seems that I have been, yet that doesn't offer definitive proof of anything. In fact, I have no undeniable proof that these weapons have been used against us, but if they have been and / or still are, I would hope that someone could step forward with more information.

Thank you,

Jessica Sweeney
